It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

Anonymous asked:

Okay, so I'd don't know if anybody else has mentioned it, but I've been thinking a while on Odin's "A wise King never seeks out war" thing. While it's true not being prepared for hostile forces isn't good, taking away other nations means of offense isn't good either (The casket and Either for example). I think one big thing the whole Odin family didn't get was while you should never seek out war, you should do everything in your power not to appear as an aggressor. The Cold War is proof of that.

lucianalight answered:

That’s one of the most hypocritical things that Odin has ever said. Specially when you consider that he has said the same thing to Hela, the child that he literally used as his weapon to conquer and subjugate the nine realms.

Odin: "A wise king never seeks out war"

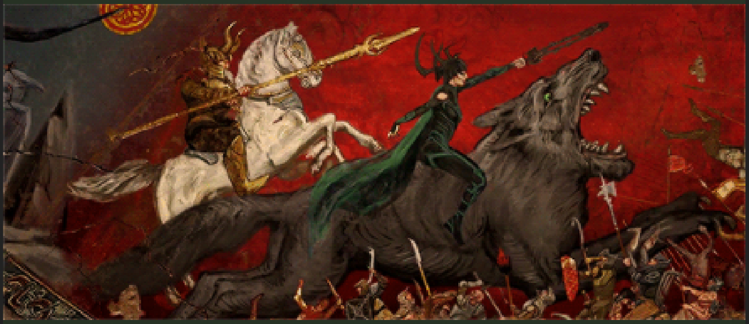
Also Odin:



The thing is Asgard didn't only appear to be an aggressor. Asgard, Odin was a colonizer. He sought wars, took away other realm's sources of power to weaken them and establish control, and enslaved them to build Asgard. And after all of that Odin pretended that he is a peaceful and benevolent king! It's not like Odin didn't understand what he did was wrong. He was hiding the truth, covering what he had done and lying to his children that Asgard was a protector.

"With the last great war ended, we withdrew from the other worlds and returned home at the Realm Eternal, Asgard. And here we remain as the beacon of hope, shining out across the stars. And though we have fallen into man's myths and legends, it was Asgard and its warriors that brought peace to the universe."

But as soon as Bifrost was destroyed the other realms started to rebel as we saw in TDW which shows they weren't happy to be under Asgard's control. Thor, Frigga and Asgardians had fallen for this facade. Hela realized the truth. Loki also could see through Odin's lies. He certainly realized that everything in Odin's vault were stolen relics.

So, I am no more than another stolen relic, locked up here until you might have use of me?

Interestingly, in TR Loki is shown to give freedom to other realms which the narrative frames it as him being an incompetent king. The same narrative, then tries to criticize Asgard colonization of other realms! Therefore we can say that Loki is the only one in Odin's family, who understood Asgard's wrong ways and tried to correct them.

Sorry for answering late dear anon. I was on a long hiatus. This ask was sent to me on September 2019.

Of Wyoming's
Indigenous Homicide
8x
Higher than for White people
Female Indigenous Homicide
6x
Higher than for White women

Between 2011 and September 2020 710 Indigenous persons were reported missing AND 1,254 Missing persons records for Indigenous people were on file

11% Are found within one day

50% Are found within one week

21% Were missing for 30 or more days

Between 2011 and September 2020 Indigenous people were listed as missing in 22 out of 23 counties

Currently, 10 Indigenous people are listed as missing

Only 30% of Indigenous homicide victims had newspaper media coverage, as compared to 51% of White homicide victims.

Female Indigenous victims had the least, with only 18% coverage

Violent Language

"...blood coming from his nose and mouth; he had a stab wound in his lower right abdominal area, with fatty tissue protruding from the wound."

Violent language was used more often (77%, n = 44) to describe Indigenous victims than to describe White victims (27%, n = 21).

Essentialism

"[They] left the body in a ditch."

These articles lack personal information. Essentialism was only found (14%, n = 11) in articles about Indigenous victims. No articles used essentialism to describe White victims (0%, n = 0).

Positive Character Framing

"He had the heart of a cowboy, a wild streak, an ever-ready joke to brighten someone's spirits."

Positive character framing was found more often (33%, n = 25) in articles about White victims than in articles about Indigenous victims (16%, n = 12).

Negative Character Framing

"The presence of toxins in [the] body at the time of his death was alcohol and chemical heavy. Peripheral blood sources showed a blood-alcohol concentration of .229 percent, an amphetamine level of 56 ng/mL, and a methamphetamine level of 180 ng/mL."

Negative character framing was found more often in articles about Indigenous victims (42%, n = 32) than in articles about White victims (24%, n = 19).

Excerpt from Wyoming Public Media*:*

Gov. Mark Gordon's Taskforce on Missing and Murdered Indigenous People has released a report on the severity of the problem in Wyoming. It found that Indigenous people make up 21% of homicides in the state even though only 3% of the population is Indigenous.

But Wyoming Survey and Analysis Research Scientist Emily Grant said these numbers could be underestimates. For instance, murder rates could be off because coroners misclassify victims. "A lot of times, it's not necessarily checked with people from the community, a family member or something like that," Grant said. [...] Grant said she also looked at media portrayals of such cases in Wyoming. "It's overly graphic," she said. "So you know, if [a White person] dies with firearms, you know, they may say 'a gunshot wound.' But in Indigenous cases, we're seeing like, very graphic depictions of the body of the crime scene. The circumstances that are just extra violent." [...]

"Being considered less than, that's unacceptable," said Fort Washakie Representative and Northern Arapaho citizen Andi Clifford, who sits on the state's Missing and Murdered Indigenous People Taskforce. "The media needs to do a better job. That's somebody's son, that's somebody's daughter, that's somebody's dad. They were loved."

In the last ten years, 710 Indigenous people went missing in Wyoming, the majority were girls. The data showed they went missing from 22 of Wyoming's 23 counties.

SUMMARY OF KEY FINDINGS

HOMICIDE

105 Indigenous people (34 females, 71 males) were victims of homicide between 2000 and 2020. Indigenous homicide victims were 21% of the total homicide victims in Wyoming between 2000 and 2020.

Between 2010 and 2019, the homicide rate per 100,000 for Indigenous people was 26.8, eight times higher than the homicide rate for White people. The homicide rate for Indigenous females was 15.3 per 100,000, 6.4 times higher than the homicide rate for White females.

MISSING

Between 2011 and September 2020, 710 Indigenous persons were reported missing. Some Indigenous people were reported missing more than once during the time period, resulting in a total of 1,254 missing person records for Indigenous people. Eighty-five percent were juvenile, and 57% were female. They were reported missing from 22 counties in Wyoming.

Ten percent of missing Indigenous people are found within the same day they are reported missing, 50% are found within one week. One-fifth of the Indigenous people reported missing were missing for 30 or more days, which is a higher percentage than White people missing for 30 or more days (11%).

Currently, 10 Indigenous people are listed as missing (3 females and 7 males).

MEDIA COVERAGE

Only 30% of Indigenous homicide victims had newspaper media coverage, as compared to 51% of White homicide victims. Indigenous female homicide victims had the least amount of newspaper media coverage (18%).

MEDIA PORTRAYAL

The newspaper articles for Indigenous homicide victims were more likely to contain violent language, portray the victim in a negative light, and provide less information as compared to articles about White homicide victims.

I read a post and decided to make a separate post about it but it was about the rebellious phase teenagers go through and how invalidating it is that parents write off the phase as the result of hormones and irrational teenage anger. And it got me thinking, because I never really had that "rebellious phase of irrational anger." The more I think about it, the more I think it's because my parents never treated me like they expected me to rebel.

This has less to do with abusive parents (which was the point of that post and also the reason I'm making a new one) and more to do with the way western society in particular fosters parental expectations when kids reach adolescence. Because even kids who had previously good relationships with their parents sometimes hit really tumultuous times in adolescence, and I don't think it is all hormonal.

There's this real self-fulfilling prophecy with the relationship between parents and teens. Parents are told by their peers and elders (esp. THEIR parents) to "expect hell" when their kids reach adolescence. I remember my mom telling me once, right around the time I turned 13, that someone at her office said to her "uh oh, buckle in, this is when things get rough!" in reference to my being a teenager. My mom kind of shrugged it off and told me "I've never understood people who want their kids to stay kids forever. You guys are more interesting every year older you get. You're becoming your own people."

And that was that. My parents didn't TELL me I was about to get rebellious and nasty to them, because they didn't expect it of me. They told me I was becoming an interesting young person with my own thoughts and ideas. And because they didn't expect me to be suddenly rebellious, they treated me like what I was: an interesting young person with my own thoughts and ideas. Someone who maybe still needed help with a few things now and then but by and large, they set expectations and gave me reasonable explanations for them, and I followed those expectations because they made sense.

My brother and I never had a curfew, for instance. Instead, my parents always just said, "let us know if you're going to be out late so we don't worry about you," with the additional explanation that that's something you should always do for the people who you share a house with, as a courtesy. They also modeled the behaviors themselves: we would leave a chair with a note in it by the front door if we were going out somewhere so anyone coming home while we were gone would know where we were–this was in the age before cell phones, you understand–and that meant my parents did it for us kids too. After all, if they wanted to know where we were so they wouldn't worry about us, it was just as important that we know where they were so we wouldn't worry about them. Our feelings were treated with the same courtesy as theirs. They respected us, so we respected them.

When boundaries needed setting there were some rocky conversations, sure, and my mom and I are STILL on occasionally rocky ground when it comes to my weight/eating habits, but generally we came to reasonable conclusions. And I never "rebelled" because I didn't have to. I wanted alcohol, my dad would've let me try his fancy beer (I never wanted it because it stank, and I still don't, but I could've tried it if I'd wanted to). I had questions about sex, my mom explained things clinically and asked if I had any questions. I wanted to wear makeup, my mom's only request was I save my allowance and buy my own instead of stealing hers. I wanted to dye my hair ridiculous colors? My mom hated it but always told me "It's your hair," (and I honestly think half the reason she hated it so much was I ruined a lot of her nice towels).

My parents accorded me with the freedoms I was naturally seeking with the expectation that I would be responsible with those freedoms, and because they expected me to be responsible, I just… was.

I'm not saying that will work with everyone of course, but I think there's something to be said for creating an atmosphere of expectation too. If parents begin tightening the reins in anticipation of rebellion (as they are told to do), they are paradoxically providing teenagers with something to rebel against.

Start treating your teenager like a prisoner, and they'll start trying to escape prison.

The first page depicts a bear in a chef hat and apron making pizza. The bear says "How come no one understands when they're silencing autistic people's voices on social media?" Followed by a drawing of an Instagram post of a crocodile captioned "Support autistic students!!!" displayed on a cellphone. There is a thought bubble that reads "How their posts seem to always get derailed by people suddenly talking about something else..." The comments below the post read Ya but school sucks , Well science is fun… , and “No, math is way more fun. One time-” And then the comment is cut off.

The next page reads “Or how posts about how to support neurodivergency tend to get shared… without the additions from autistic people”. Also on the page, below the text, is a drawing of a tumblr post that reads “Support neurodivergency” by user Johnbeans. The notes show user autistic-apple-sauce reblogging the post with the caption “Support autistic people!” And below that, there is a reblog by user todd-mango with the caption “Support _____ people!”. Todd-mango’s addition is reblogged by several users, and autistic-apple-sauce’s addition is not reblogged by anybody.

The third page has two parts. The first part reads “Or how people water down our experiences?” Next to an image of a rabbit saying “I’m autistic. I can’t read voice tone well…”. Below the rabbit is a comment by user NTLIFE that says “Duh! It’s hard 4 everyone!”. The second part says “Or how people only listen when we say something “cool”.” Below that text is an image of a giraffe in a video saying “TFW your social battery drains mid convo” with replies saying “Wow mooood” and “LOL same!!”. Both messages are liked. Below that is an image of a dog holding a toy bear in a video saying “Hey look at my new stim toy!” There are two replies saying “Wut r you? 4???” and “Cringe!!!”. Neither message is liked.

The fourth page says “Or when it’s not us speaking for ourselves at all…” with the words “us” and “at all” in bold. Below that is a search for ‘autis’ with the two top results being user Autism Talks with 500,000 follows and user Autistic-Apple-Sauce with 13 follows. Below that panel are the words “Or when they deem us not “Attractive enough” to be treated fairly…” above two images of two videos depicting a sheep and a cat in matching shirts. Below the sheep’s video is the comment “Yesss autistic ppl rock!!” With two heart emojis from user NTLIFE. Below the cat’s video is the comment “Wow ur wing sux autisic ppl suck” from user NTLIFE. The sheep’s video has a thumbs up and the cat’s video has a thumb down.

The next page says “Or how positivity posts get overrun by biased opinions & info that deviate from the purpose of the post?” above a drawing of a twitter post. The post is an image of the bear from the first page saying “You’re valid if you’re self diagnosed!”. The first comment says “Umm u can’t self diagnose :/” With a cut of reply from the bear saying “Official diagnosis is hard to get due to bigotry and ableism in the medical world”. There are five more comments below from different users that say “You’re not autistic”, “U can’t prove einstein was autistic!”, “Legally, no. My dad is a lawyer and he says-”, “U don’t look like my autistic friend”, and “Medically, no. My doctor says that you need-”

The final page is four panels of the the bear from the first page. In the first panel, the bear is putting their pizza in the oven. They're saying "It's almost like some people are so quick to delegitimise & trivialize autistic people cos they only want to acknowledge us when we're "cool" or convenient enough for them & when we're not, they render us obsolete either by ignoring us, digressing, speaking over us, or bu claiming "everyone does that."..." The second panel depicts the bear cutting and taking a slice of pizza. They're saying "Like... you ever notice that?". The third panel has no text and depicts the bear taking a bite. The fourth panel has the bear holding their slice and saying "Cos that makes me so angry mate it literally jumbles my damn beans." /.End ID]

I've seen so much bad faith discourse today that could easily be solved by everyone acknowledging that multiple things can be true at solved by everyone acknowledging that multiple things can be true at once because the world is actually really complex.

tikkunolamorgtfo Follow

Still stewing about this. Like… everybody wants there to be some sort of definitive Maslow's Hierarchy of Oppression for all situations instead of accepting that different power dynamics can simultaneously exist on multiple axes. And I'm sorry but it just doesn't work that way.

Let's look at my grandfather as an example:

He was an Indian man born under colonial British rule who supported the Indian National Army, an armed force formed by Indian nationalists and Imperial Japan in 1942 in Southeast Asia during World War II. He was studying and working in the US during the war and wasn't able to return to India in order to fight with them, but I know he wanted to. And on one hand, fighting to end British colonial rule in India was 100% a noble goal. I'm fully down with giving a hearty "fuck you" to British imperialism.

But on the other hand… the Japanese were an Axis power with their own history of imperialism, and were endeavouring to establish even greater dominion over China and Korea (the latter of which had already been annexed by Japan in 1910). And on top of that, they were allied with, y'know, the Nazis, which… as a Jewish person, I have to just say: Not great, Bob!

I mean, you had this Indian military force that was fighting against British colonialism, but they were doing it by aligning with another imperialist power, who in turn were aligned with the fucking Nazis, who the British were trying stop. In fact, Subhas Chandra Bose, the leader of the INA, actually lived in Berlin from 1941-1943 during the height of the final solution, and had even met with Hitler and other Nazi officials about forming alliances to defeat Britain, until he finally came to the conclusion that "the new nationalism of Germany is not only narrow and selfish but arrogant." And yeah, it was definitely fucked up that Bose spent time working on an Indian alliance with Hitler to the point where he was living in Nazi Germany for two fucking years, but on the other hand, he was mostly there because the British threw him in jail for leading mass protests against their own imperialism, and the Germans strategically gave him asylum with the goal of turning British Indian POW against the Allied Powers (they totally would have invaded India later if given the chance but I digress). And meanwhile, Churchill, while fighting off the Nazis—which, again: good—was also enacting policies that contributed to (or at least exacerbated) a major famine in Bengal that killed 3 million people, which didn't bother him at all because he was a massive anti-Indian racist who said doing anything to help was pointless because we (Indian people) "breed like rabbits."

So anyway, back to my grandfather. He was an Indian man who wanted to end the centuries-long occupation of his country by the British by any means necessary, to the point where he considered fighting for an anti-British army that was aligned with the Axis powers. And yet… he was also madly in love with his Jewish wife, and the proud father of a Jewish-Indian son, and he hated the Nazis, because, y'know, people tend not to like regimes who want to murder their family.

So what do you take from all that?

I feel like so many of you just want to see things in black and white, and decide if somebody is stanned or cancelled. But there are so many situations where you can't do that—where things are grey or dualities exist at the same time.

The whole thing with the INA and the Japanese and the Nazis and British - it's like a snake eating itself. I can't fault my grandfather's desire to join the INA as a way of overthrowing the British, and I also can't wholly support it. It's not quite wrong and not quite right, and I'm saying that as somebody with 80 years of history in the rearview mirror, which means at that particular moment in time, it was probably even more unclear and confusing.

And sure, there are plenty of things in history that are more clear cut. In If you look at the fight between the Brits and Nazis in microcosm, obviously the Brits are in the right, because fucking Nazis. And if you look at the fight between Brits and the people of India, obviously the Brits are the wankers, because fuck colonialism. But a lot of things are much greyer or amorphous than that, and sometimes we either need to accept that we've been presented with a Gordian knot or agree that there are situations where multiple things are true at once.

We can hold indentured labourers in the 1800s accountable for their role in colonialism and also empathise with the systemic powerlessness they sang about in work songs, and neither cancel nor absolve them, but instead learn about history and also look at parallels between then and now, where disenfranchised people in the West often benefit from sweat shop labour abuses abroad without necessarily being able to immediately do anything to stop it.

We can be honest about the fact that American soldiers of all races in the Korean and Vietnam wars aided in unleashing extreme imperialist violence against the people of those nations, but also empathise with the fact that many of them, especially Black soldiers, were only there because of systemic racism at home—and we can also acknowledge that even in spite of all this, many Asians are still horribly anti-Black/contribute to the systemic oppression of Black people, instead of having useless fights over whether a fictional Black soldier in the Korean war should be the protagonist of a show or not.

And we can acknowledge that sometime two disabled people will have competing needs that can't necessarily be reconciled, instead of declaring that one of them is being ableist against the other.

Sometimes nobody is the hero and nobody is the villain, and sometimes we're both all at once, and the sooner everybody recognises that, the sooner I can stop banging my head against a fucking wall.

you're not a 14 year old terf you're a child in danger and one day you will be an adult and if you are very lucky you will be full of regret, or you will become an adult so vile and broken that the only people who can stand you will be just as vile and broken as you. you do not have to do this.

iwouldservehim Follow

Like, for all teens in hate groups, the actual 'danger' are the adults dragging you into foolish ideologies by taking advantage of your vulnerabilities and fears. This is 'being groomed'.

If the people you're surrounded with post discourse of far-fetched 'dangers' of a minority group of people's mere existence, run. If they start talking about how everyone else is trying to hide such absurd 'truths' from you. That only them as a hate group actually care about these dangers and about protecting you. Run. Block. "Iphis."

There is something in her voice that makes me look at her then, something warm and perhaps warmer still, and when my eyes meet hers, she throws her arms around my neck and kisses me. I kiss her back, thinking – wildly – that this is the first time we have kissed outside the shadow of that lie, that this is the first gesture of love we have shared with each other in truth. Something stirs in me at the thought that it might not be the last, nor the most lasting.

"Iphis. My boy, Iphis."

And this is my body. As she touches me and claims my body as hers, so too does she claim it as mine, and I recognise myself in her fingertips. I know myself in the shapes she traces on the flat bone between my breasts; I am mirrored in the way she sounds when I touch her. I know as I have not known before that this body of mine is just that; the skin and the flesh of a boy. The hands that touch her are the hands of a boy. The breasts that she kisses are the breasts of a boy. The hips that curve like snake bones in the sheets as she holds them are the hips of a boy.

I found this on my phone and I really wish I'd finished this already because I want to read it, but it's been on hold for the past few months. So many works in progress, so little time! Mythology Mondays has taken priority of late, which I'm fine with. I hope I don't lose my ability to write poetry or serious prose in the interim! Might have to start practising again just to keep it going.

Iphis and Ianthe, eternal otp, even when I take time off from their epic love story to write the stories of their contemporaries in dudebro slang.

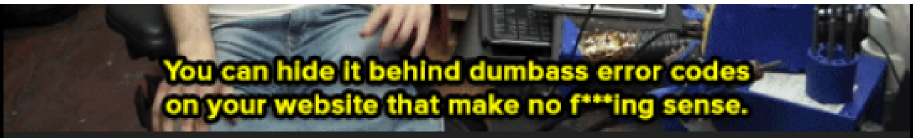
Apple, you can hide all the schematics you want. You can hide the board views. You can hide the data sheets ...

So that I have to go out of my way to figure out how every single part of it works.

You can hide the diagnostic software. You can hide the diagnostic tools.

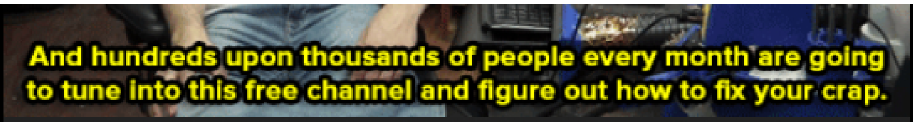


You can hide it behind dumbass error codes on your website that make no fing sense.

And you can do all of this all day to keep people from repairing your products ...

and I will sit here every single day filming a new video walking through exactly how to get around all of your bullshit.

And I will sit here to repair every single one of these things that you have deemed unrepairable.



And hundreds upon thousands of people every month are going to tune into this free channel and figure out how to fix your crap.

So for every single little bit of effort you put in to making these products difficult to repair,

I will put in an equal or greater amount of effort into making them easier to repair for people all around the world. F you.

That's Louis Rossman, a repair technician and YouTuber, who went viral recently for railing against Apple. Apple purposely charges a lot for repairs and you either have to pay up or buy a new device. That's because Apple withholds necessary tools and information from outside repair shops. And to think, we were just so close to change.

This guy inspired me to repair my own macbook. First of all, you should know that I am not... like, I have to look up HOW to look up what my computer specifications are. Tech, that ware either soft or hard, is not a subject in which I experience comfort or competence.

But my puppy peed on my keyboard, and I asked the apple store, or the fucking mac cafe, or the godsdamn Computer House Chill Zone or whatever cute ass name they have for their bullshit store, and they said it would be TWELVE HUNDRED DOLLARS TO REPLACE MY KEYBOARD. I'm not even exaggerating.

So I asked the internet, well how hard IS it to repair? And I saw this guy's video, and while I am no techie, I AM fueled by spite, so I was all "oh, they do that shit on purpose specifically so they can charge me $1200 bucks or make me buy a new computer hunh? FUCK THEM" and I bought all the tools I needed for about $25 and I bought all the parts I needed for about another $25 and I watched a few tutorial videos, and I replaced my own keyboard.

So, once you are doing the actual deed, it becomes pretty obvious that they are finding creative ways to make this much harder than it has to be on purpose. On thing that stood out to me is, instead of all the tiny screws being the same size, there are about two dozen very slightly different sizes. They could easily be all the same size, or like, two sizes at most, but no.

These mother fuckers will take a panel that screws into place and they'll use a different size screw for each corner. They are so close that you almost cannot tell them apart visually, but they each will only screw into the matching corner. Like, it's a pretty clear "fuck you" to anyone trying to do repairs.

anyway, this guy is also fueled by spite, and doing holy work, and I have mad respect

CHICKEN MAMA
STORY BY BLAIR BRAVERMAN
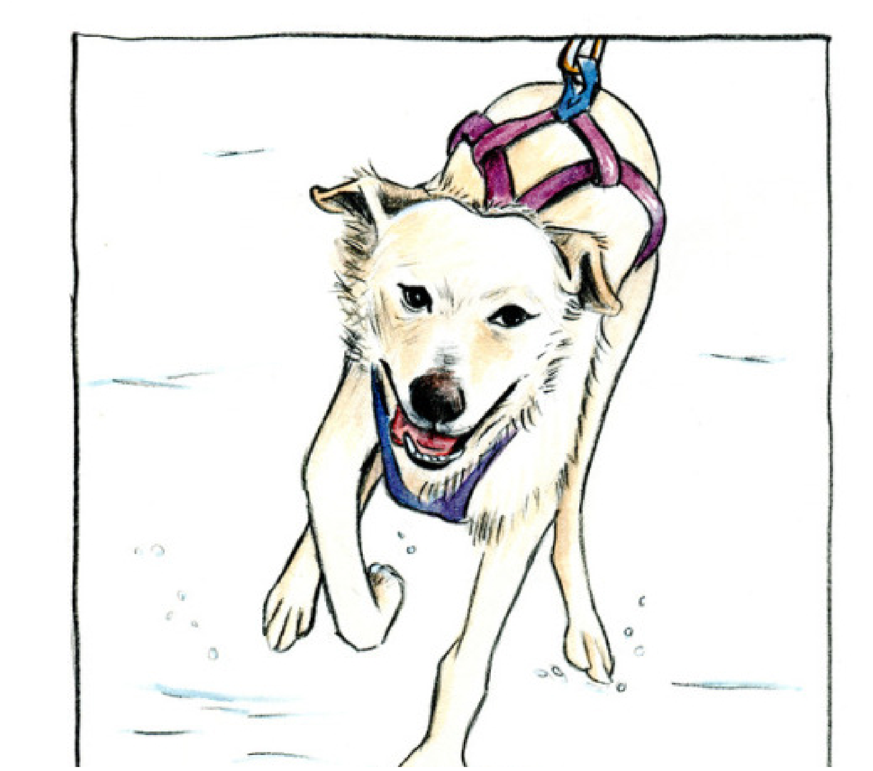
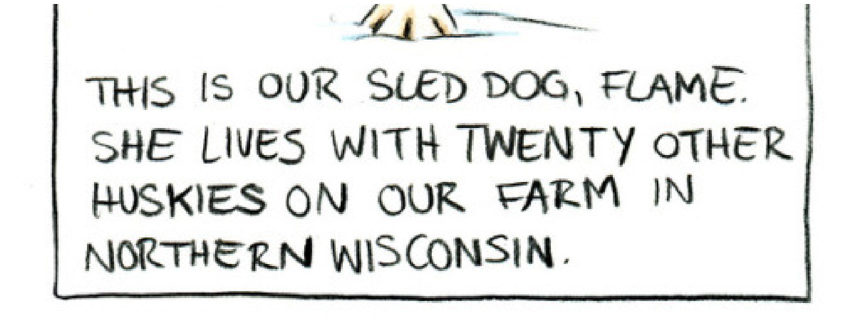
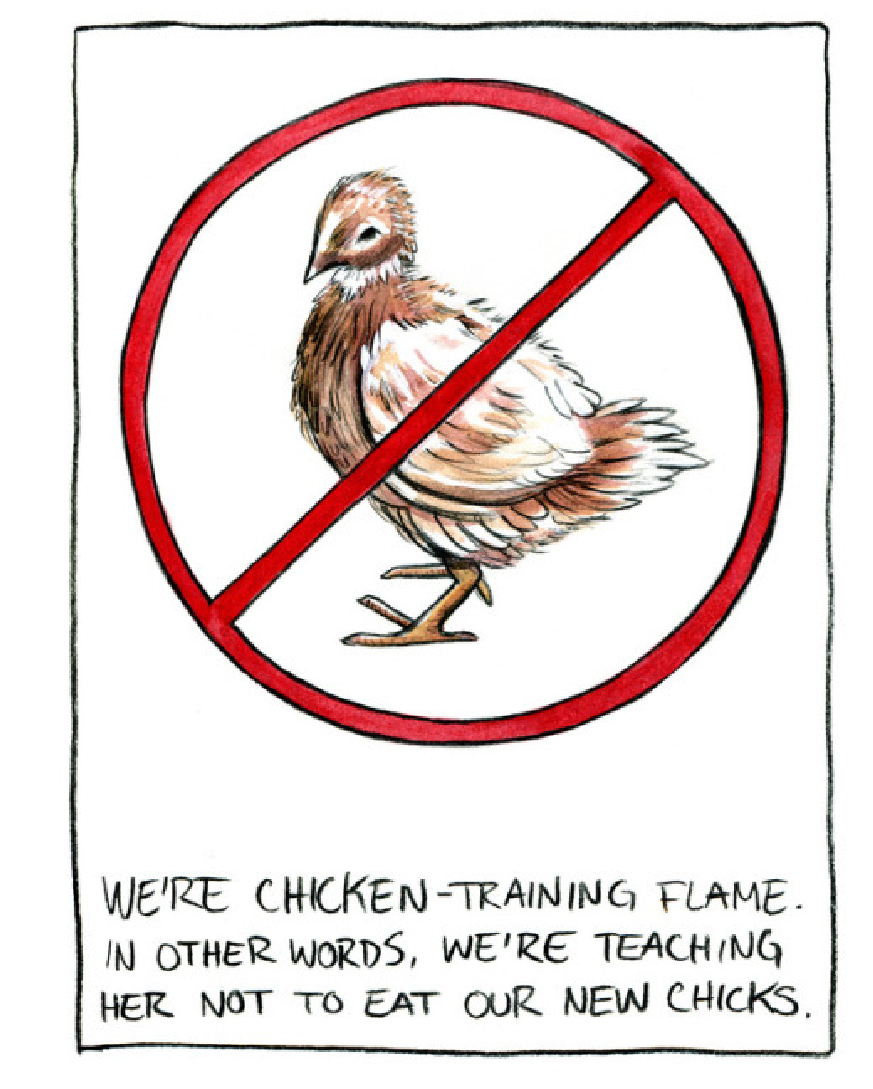
ART BY SOPHIA WIEDEMAN

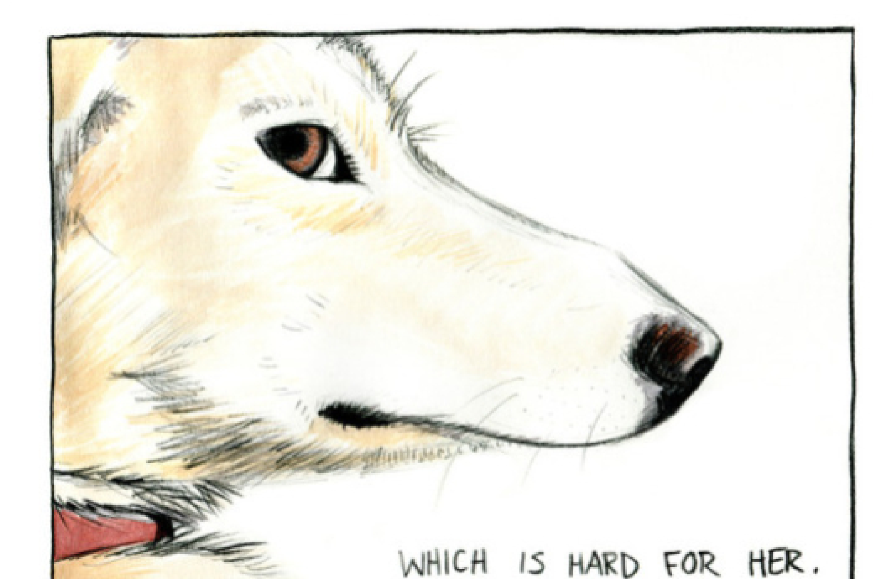




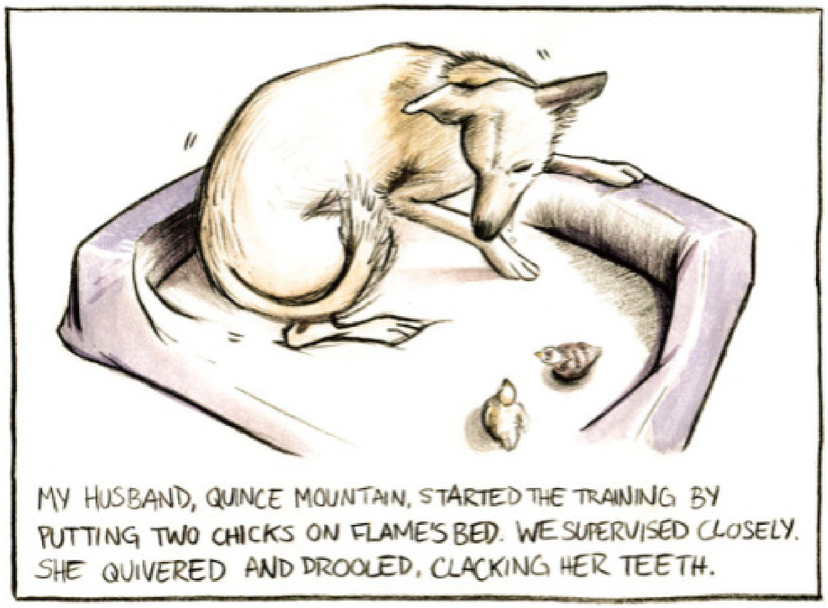
THIS IS OUR SLED DOG, FLAME. SHE LIVES WITH TWENTY OTHER HUSKIES ON OUR FARM IN NORTHERN WISCONSIN.



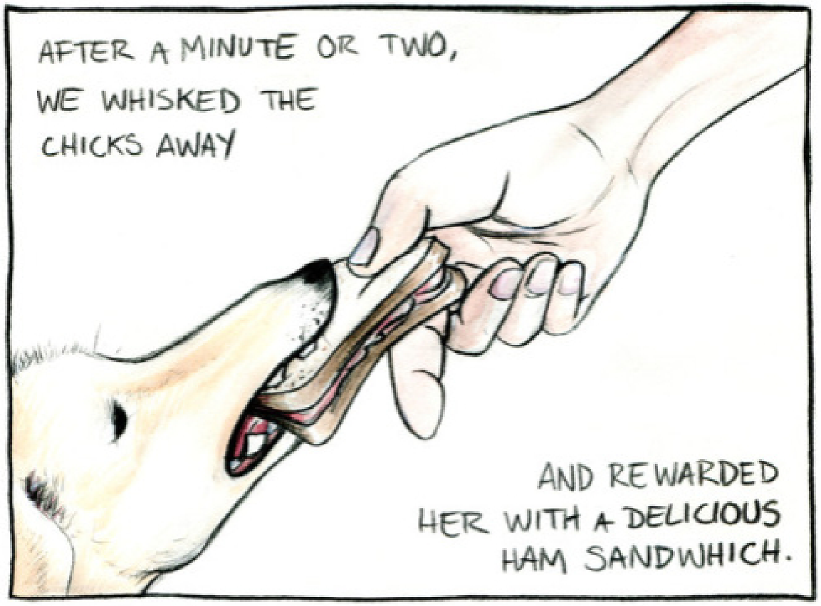
WE'RE CHICKEN-TRAINING FLAME. IN OTHER WORDS, WE'RE TEACHING HER NOT TO EAT OUR NEW CHICKS.



WHICH IS HARD FOR HER.



MY HUSBAND, QUINCE MOUNTAIN, STARTED THE TRAINING BY PUTTING TWO CHICKS ON FLAME'S BED. WE SUPERVISED CLOSELY. SHE QUIVERED AND DROOLED, CLACKING HER TEETH.



AFTER A MINUTE OR TWO, WE WHISKED THE CHICKS AWAY AND REWARDED HER WITH A DELICIOUS HAM SANDWHICH.

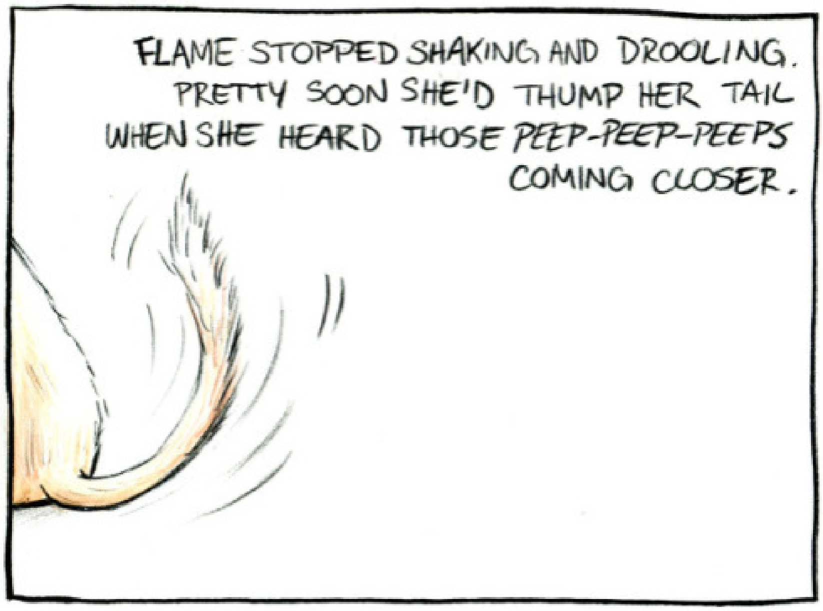
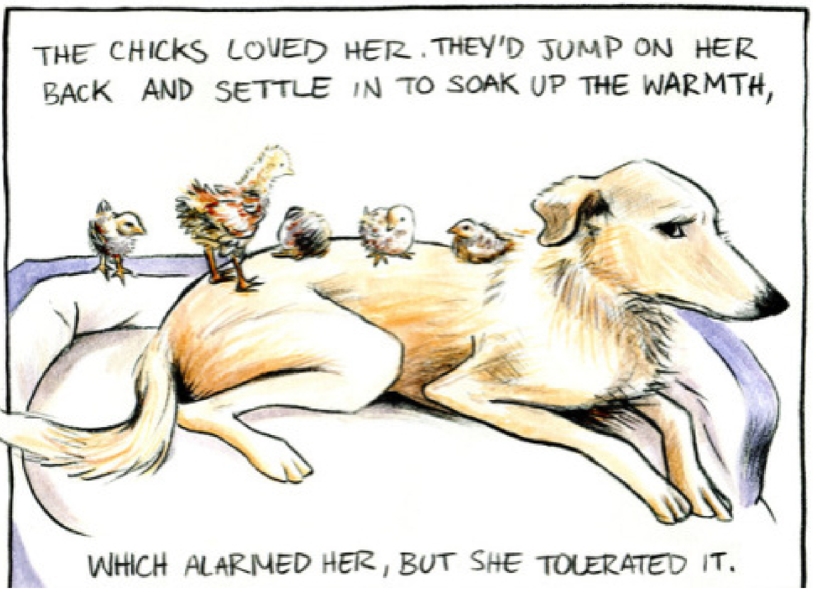
THAT WAS A FEW WEEKS AGO. SINCE THEN, EVERY OTHER DAY, WE'VE BROUGHT OVER MORE CHICKS FOR SLIGHTLY LONGER PERIODS OF TIME.



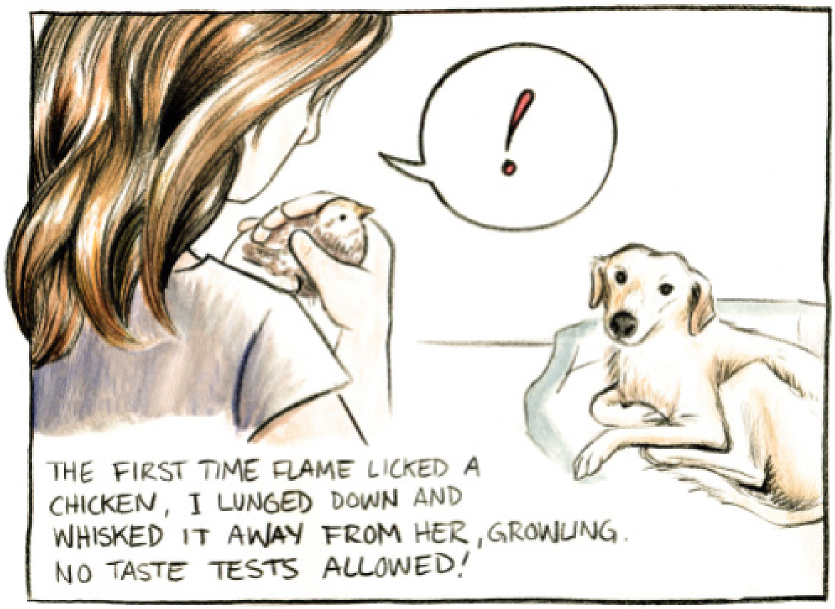
FLAME STOPPED SHAKING AND DROOLING. PRETTY SOON SHE'D THUMP HER TAIL WHEN SHE HEARD THOSE PEEP-PEEP-PEEPS COMING CLOSER.

THEN A FUNNY THING HAPPENED...

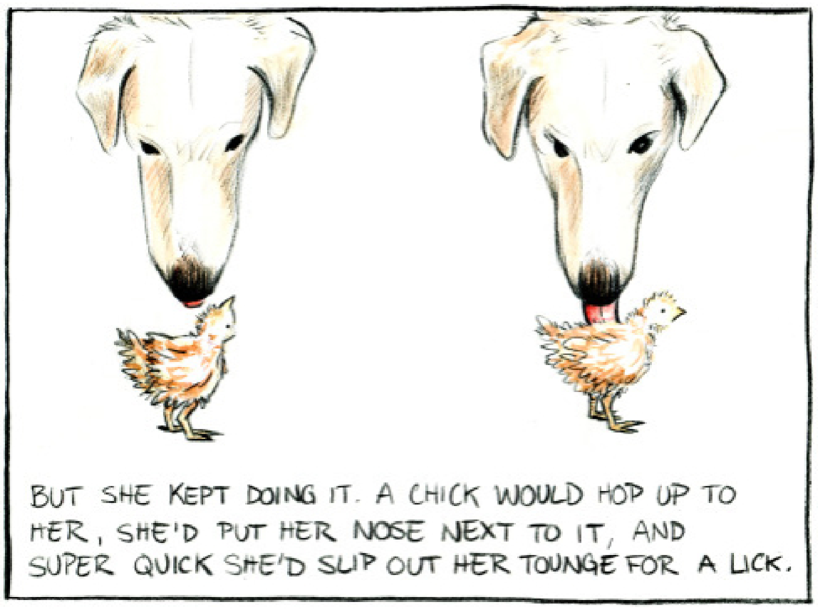


THE CHICKS LOVED HER. THEY'D JUMP ON HER BACK AND SETTLE IN TO SOAK UP THE WARMTH,

WHICH ALARMED HER, BUT SHE TOLERATED IT.

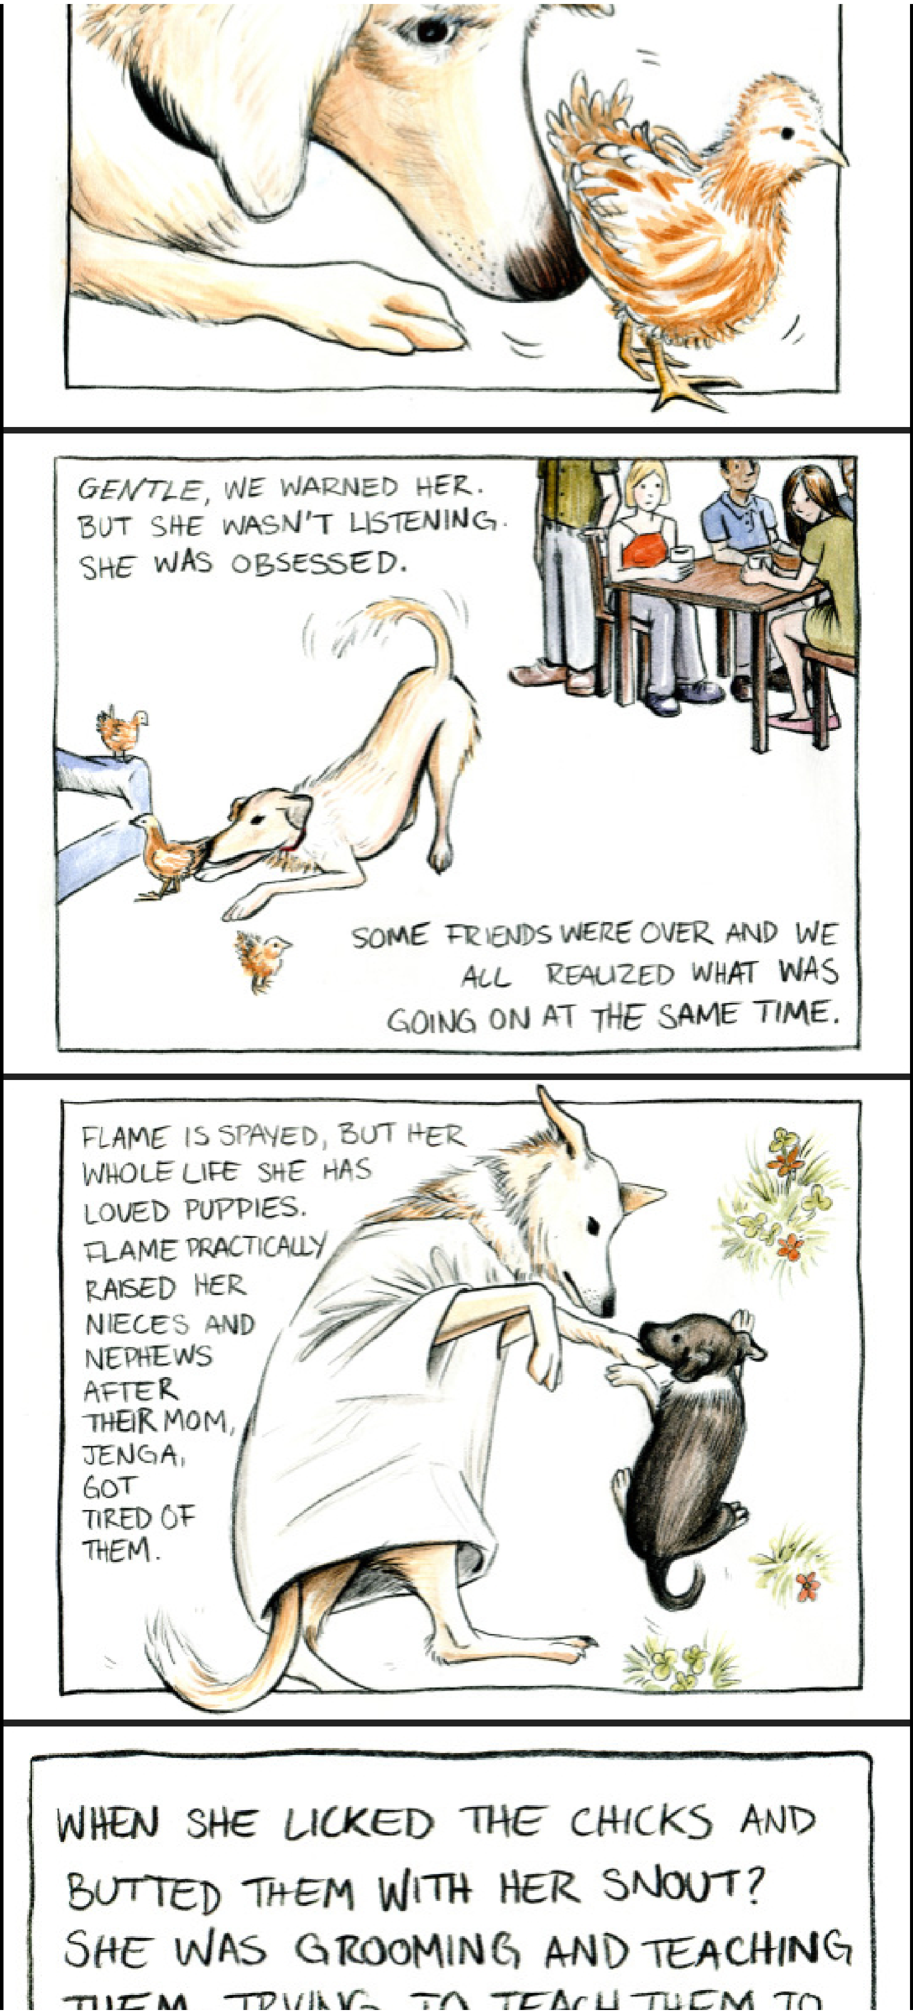


THE FIRST TIME FLAME LICKED A CHICKEN, I LUNGED DOWN AND WHISKED IT AWAY FROM HER, GROWLING. NO TASTE TESTS ALLOWED!

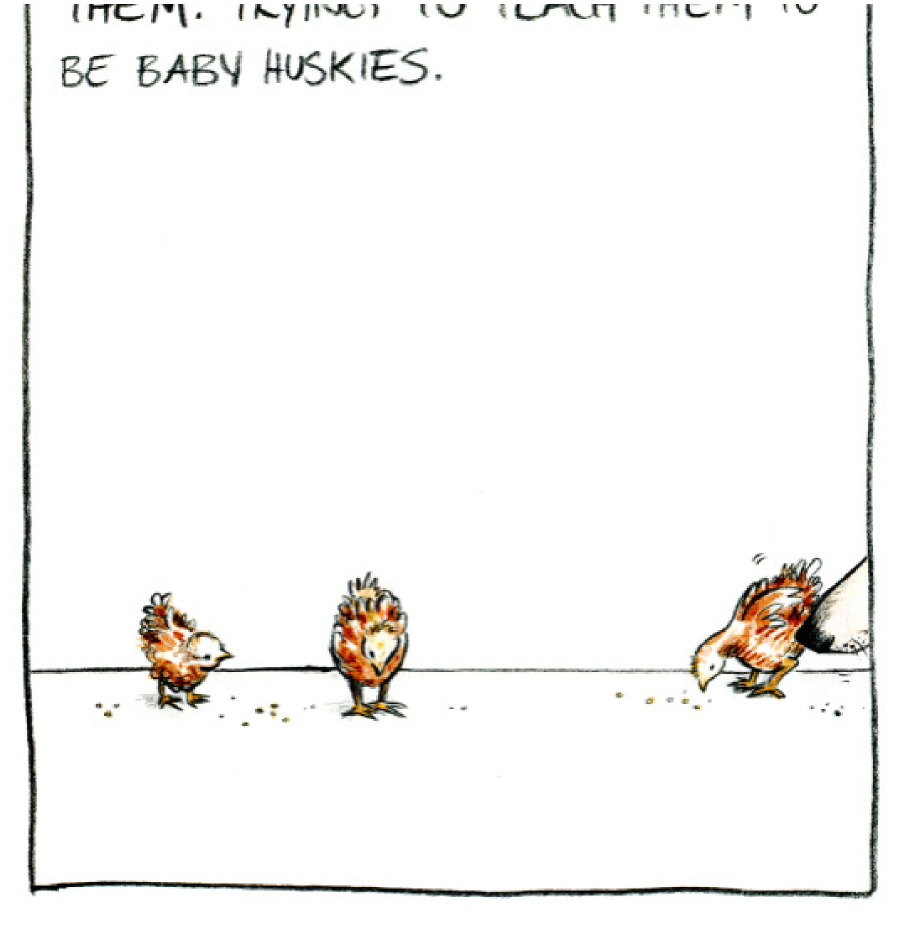


BUT SHE KEPT DOING IT. A CHICK WOULD HOP UP TO HER, SHE'D PUT HER NOSE NEXT TO IT, AND SUPER QUICK SHE'D SLIP OUT HER TOUNGE FOR A LICK.

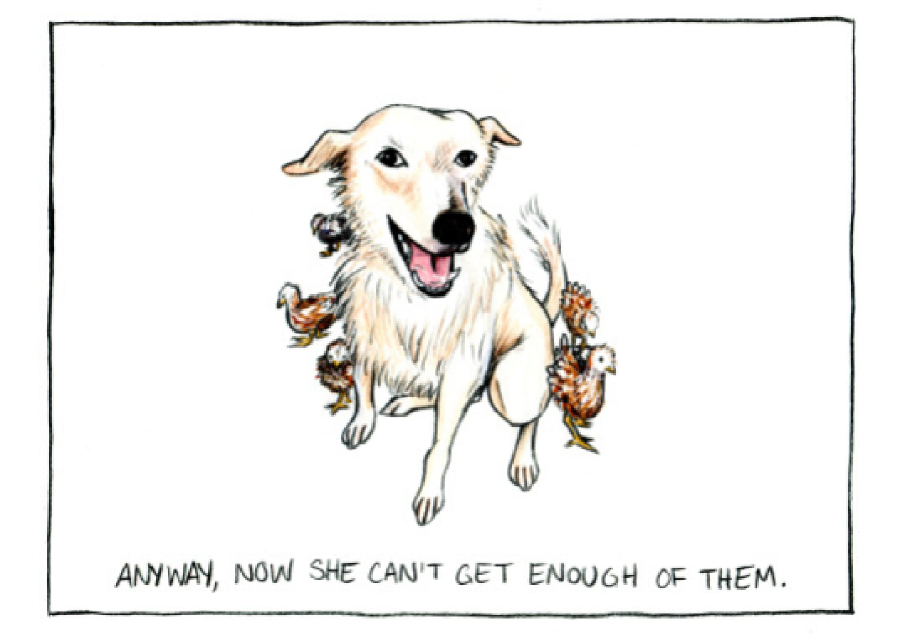
SHE WAS GETTING ROUGHER WITH THEM TOO. BEFORE SHE WAS TENSE AND STILL; NOW SHE'D BUTT THE CHICKS WITH HER SNOUT AND PUSH THEM AROUND.



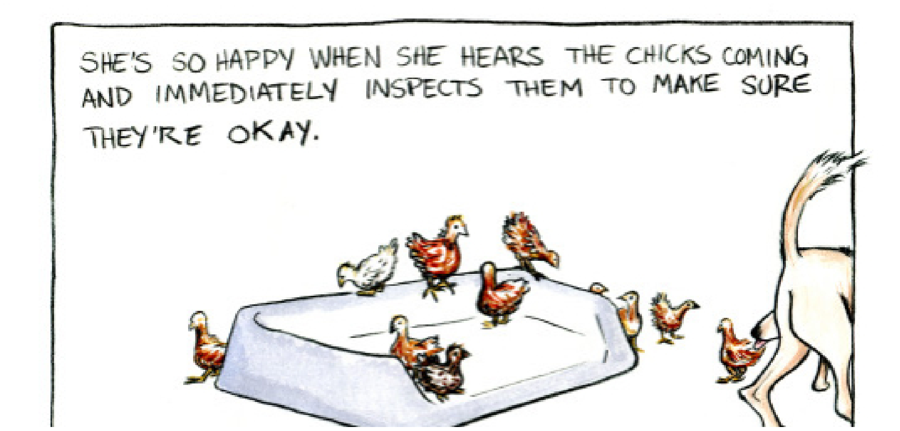
GENTLE, WE WARNED HER. BUT SHE WASN'T LISTENING. SHE WAS OBSESSED.
SOME FRIENDS WERE OVER AND WE ALL REALIZED WHAT WAS GOING ON AT THE SAME TIME.
FLAME IS SPAYED, BUT HER WHOLE LIFE SHE HAS LOVED PUPPIES. FLAME PRACTICALLY RAISED HER NIECES AND NEPHEWS AFTER THEIR MOM, JENGA, GOT TIRED OF THEM.
WHEN SHE LICKED THE CHICKS AND BUTTED THEM WITH HER SNOUT? SHE WAS GROOMING AND TEACHING THEM, TRYING TO TEACH THEM TO



THEM. TRYING TO TEACH THEM TO BE BABY HUSKIES.

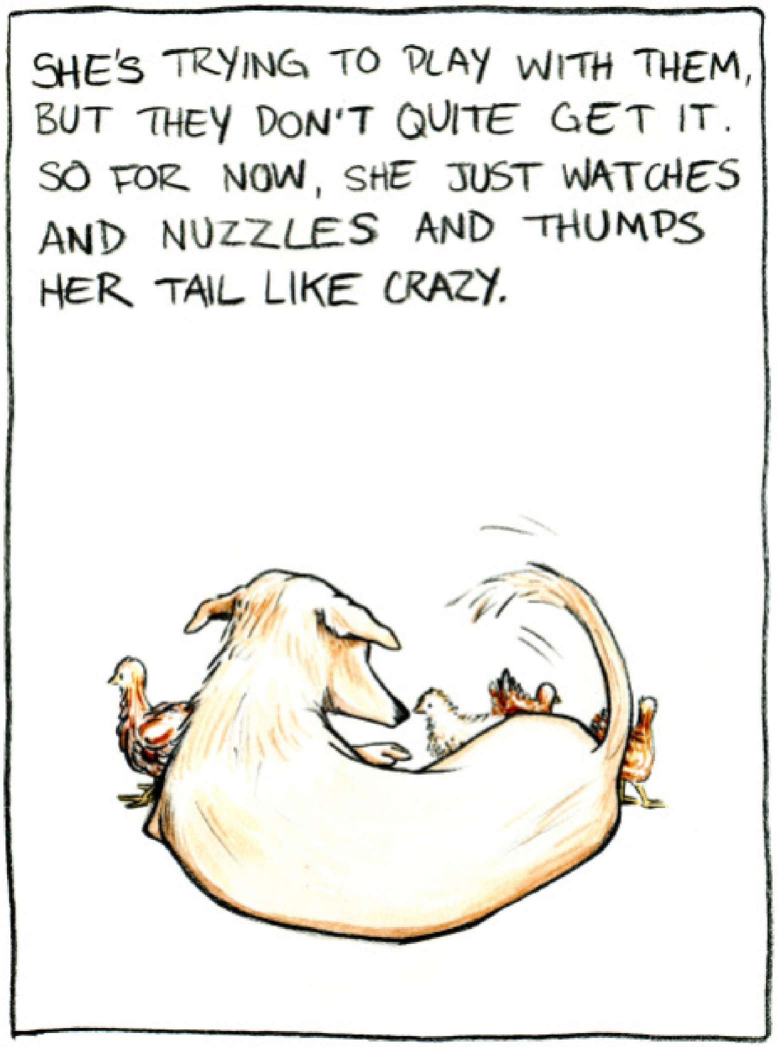


ANYWAY, NOW SHE CAN'T GET ENOUGH OF THEM.

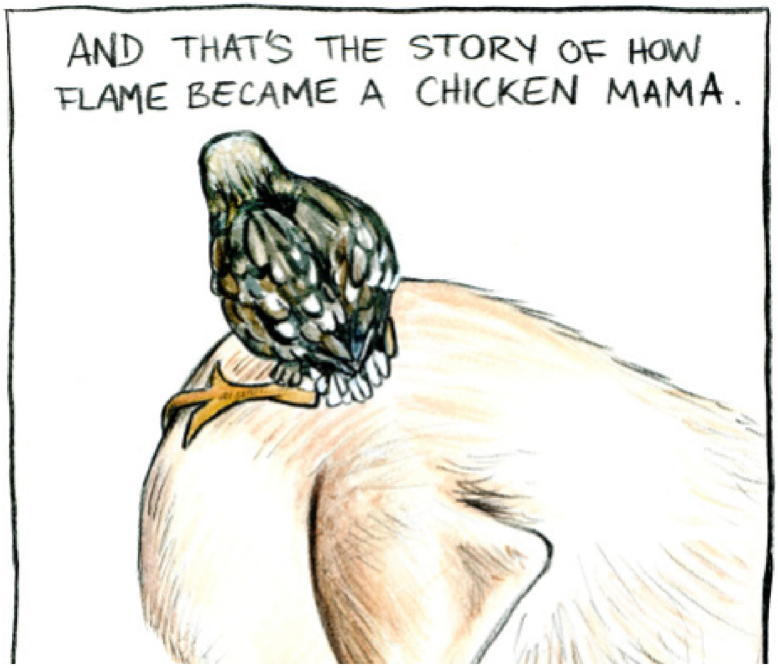


SHE'S SO HAPPY WHEN SHE HEARS THE CHICKS COMING AND IMMEDIATELY INSPECTS THEM TO MAKE SURE THEY'RE OKAY.

WE HAVE ELEVEN CHICKS, AND SHE KNOWS THEM ALL. IF SHE CAN'T SEE ONE SHE'LL GO SEARCHING AND ONLY RELAX WHEN SHE FINDS IT.



SHE'S TRYING TO PLAY WITH THEM, BUT THEY DON'T QUITE GET IT. SO FOR NOW, SHE JUST WATCHES AND NUZZLES AND THUMPS HER TAIL LIKE CRAZY.



AND THAT'S THE STORY OF HOW FLAME BECAME A CHICKEN MAMA.

5 WAYS WHITE
WOMEN CENTER THEMSELVES IN

CONVERSATIONS ABOUT RACE

@CELISIASTANTON

1. CRYING

I don't care whether you're crying because you feel attacked or crying because you feel guilty — either way, you need to stop. When you cry the natural focus shifts to you because many folks don't feel comfortable continuing a conversation with someone who is so visibly distraught.

You've created two scenarios: either I have to console you, or I have to put away the conversation. Neither is fair and both are to appease you — the white person who is not harmed and is actually benefitted by racism.

@CELISIASTANTON

2. REDIRECTING TO YOUR TRAUMA

Trauma and mental illness are both very real and should be taken seriously. That said, conversations about racism are not the time and place to focus on the struggles you've been through in your life, nor are they sufficient excuses for not engaging in the intentional work of anti-racism.

I always find these redirects ironic because racism is traumatic. Constantly dealing with white fragility is traumatic. By re-centering the conversation to be about you and your trauma you are contributing to the racial trauma of the person you’re speaking to.

@CELISIASTANTON

3. BRINGING UP TIMES WHEN YOU WERE A “GOOD ALLY”

Please stop. You think we can’t tell, but I promise you — we can. I don’t want to hear about that one time when you stood up for a Black person, I don’t want to hear about how inspiring the book you read last month was, and I certainly don’t want to hear about that one friend you have who you noticed did something racist once.

I’m sorry you’re just not going to be getting a biscuit for any of that. Save yourself some energy, girl! Quit the show. We’ll know if you’re a good ally if you show us with your actions. When you recenter yourself in this way it forces us to reassure you that you are in fact a “good person” and “not a racist”. Exhausting.

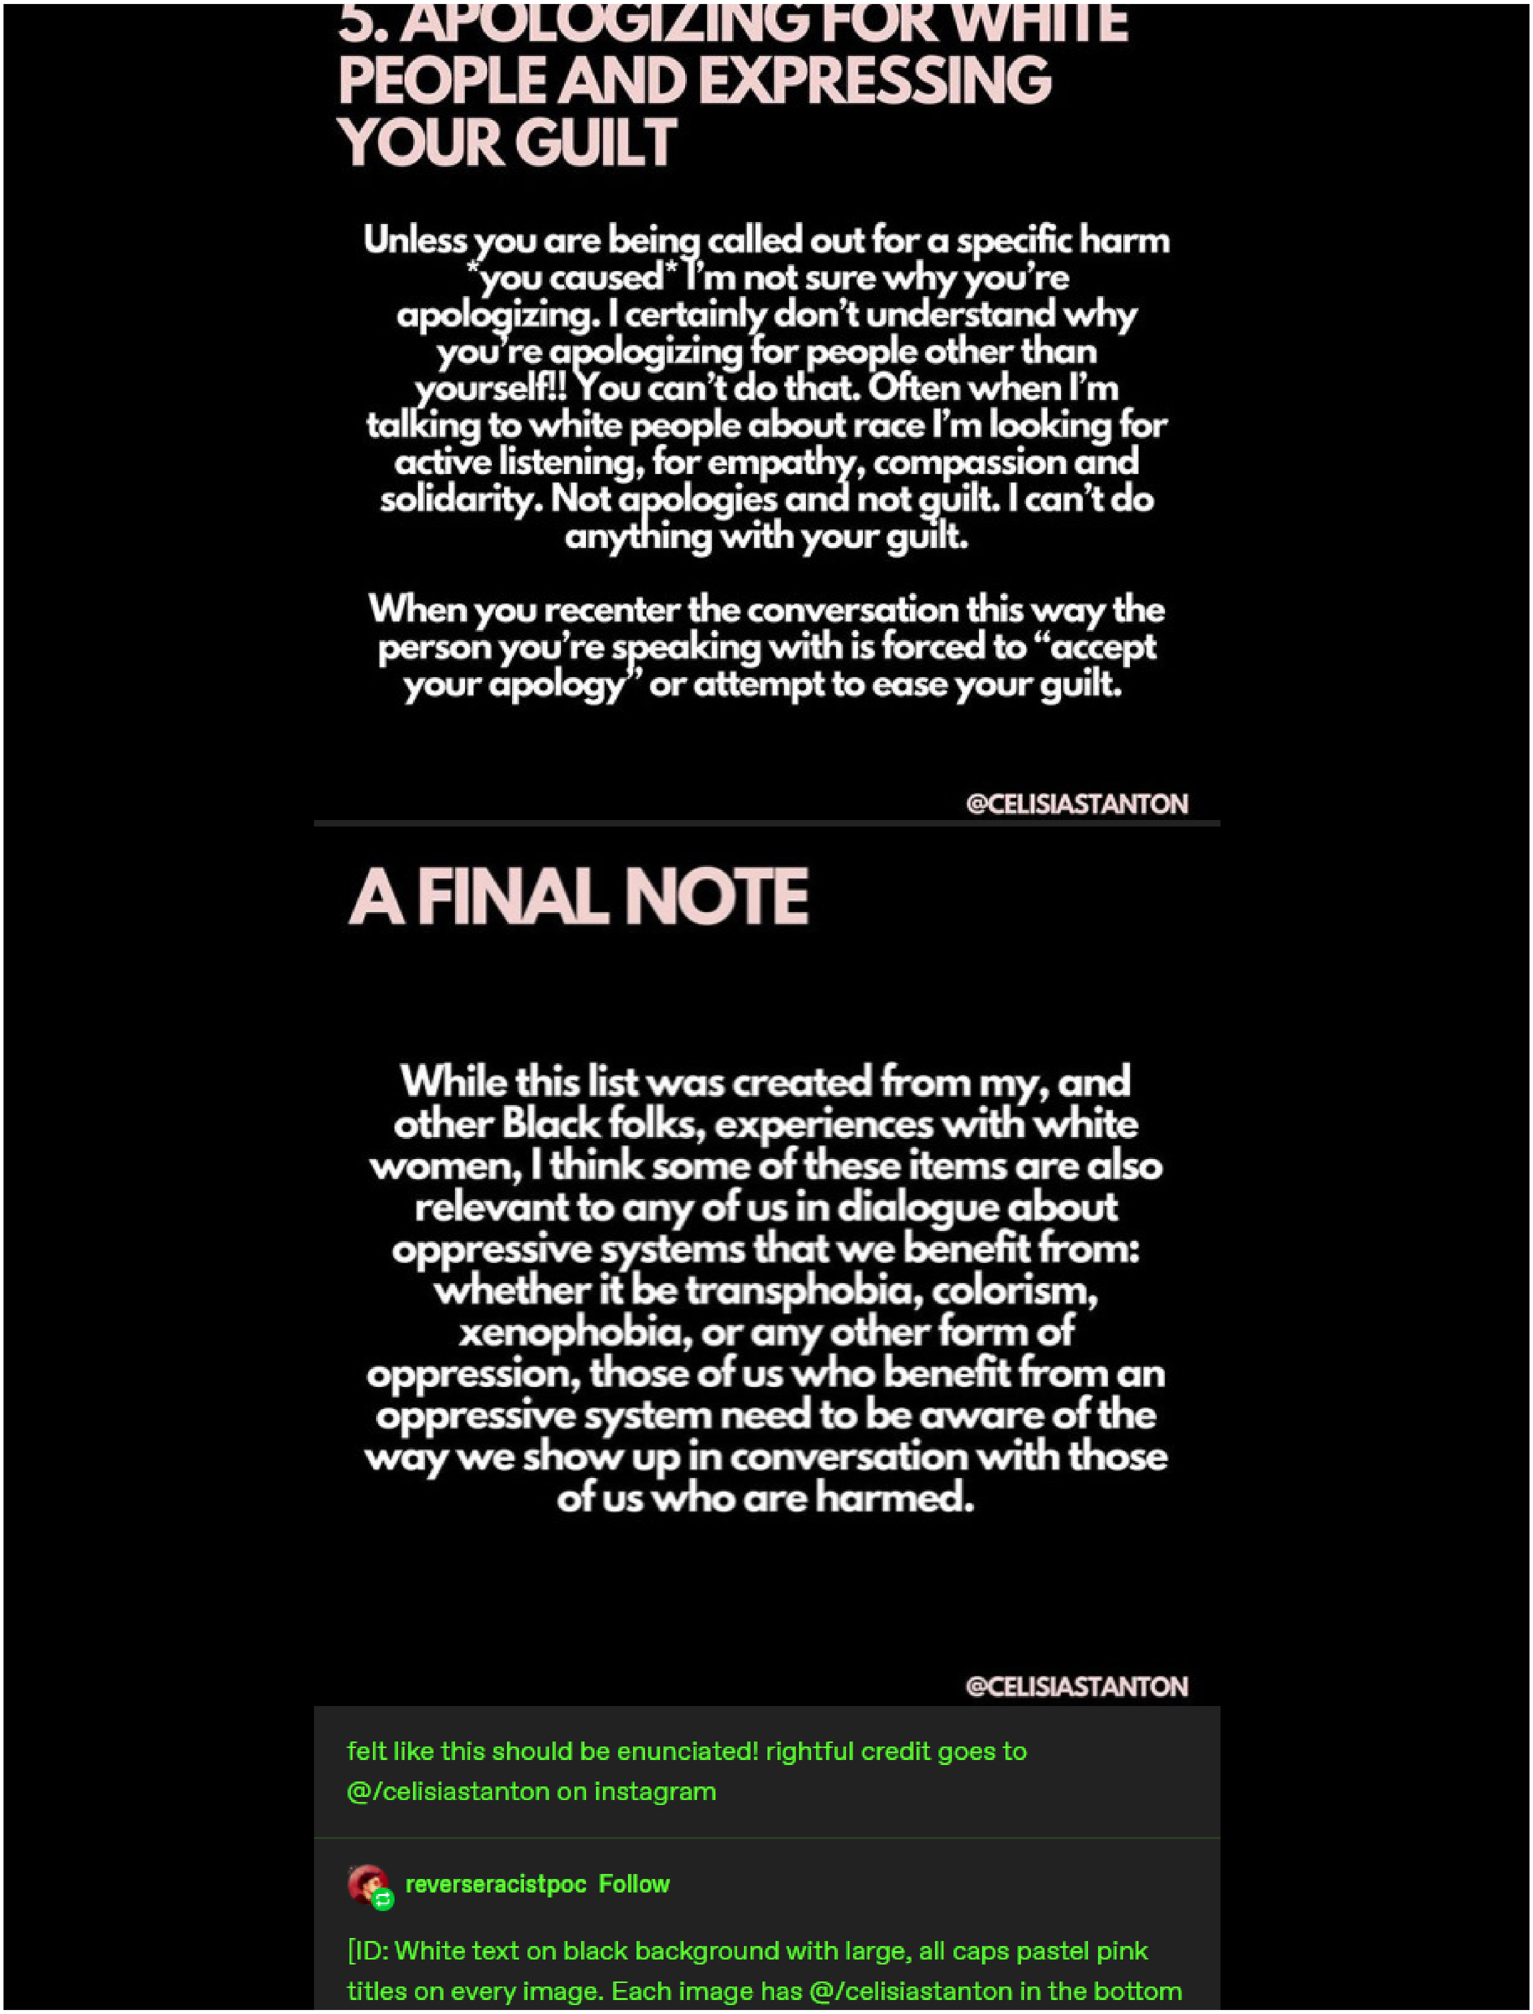
@CELISIASTANTON

4. CREDENTIALING

This is something that Robin Diangelo discusses in her book White Fragility shaped by her learnings from Black folks. Stop talking about all the qualifications you have in this area. Having Black friends, living in a Black neighborhood, getting a degree in ethnic studies, working in social justice, writing a book. I don’t care how “official” the credential sounds. If you are white there are not enough credentials in the world to immunize you from racism.

This really builds off the last point because you are again centering yourself in a way that expects the person you’re speaking to to validate your “credential” as sufficient credit to excuse you of your racism. Yet again, the conversation has become about you.

@CELISIASTANTON



5. APOLOGIZING FOR WHITE PEOPLE AND EXPRESSING YOUR GUILT

Unless you are being called out for a specific harm you caused I'm not sure why you're apologizing. I certainly don't understand why you're apologizing for people other than yourself!! You can't do that. Often when I'm talking to white people about race I'm looking for active listening, for empathy, compassion and solidarity. Not apologies and not guilt. I can't do anything with your guilt.

When you recenter the conversation this way the person you're speaking with is forced to "accept your apology" or attempt to ease your guilt.

@CELISIASTANTON

A FINAL NOTE

While this list was created from my, and other Black folks, experiences with white women, I think some of these items are also relevant to any of us in dialogue about oppressive systems that we benefit from: whether it be transphobia, colorism, xenophobia, or any other form of oppression, those of us who benefit from an oppressive system need to be aware of the way we show up in conversation with those of us who are harmed.

Lesbian Love from Mythology Depicted in Art

> Sappho and Erinna in a Garden at Mytilene, 1864. Simeon Solomon (British, 1840–1905). The painting depicts Sappho embracing her fellow poet Erinna in a garden on the island of Lesbos. The artist himself was gay and known for his depictions of same-sex desire.
> Les metamorphoses d'ovide, Iphis et Ianthe, 1886. Auguste Rodin (French, 1840–1917). The sculpture depicts a passionate embrace between two lovers and is sometimes interpreted as the girls Iphis and Ianthe. After the two fall deeply in love, Iphis prays to the goddess Isis for help and is later turned into a man in order for the two of them to get married. As it happens.
> Ruth and Naomi, 1886. Philip Hermogenes Calderon (British, 1833–1898). The book of Ruth, according to some, is the great love story of the Bible and it happens to be a story about the undying love and loyality between two women.
> Jupiter sous la forme de Diane, seduit Calisto, 1800. Maurice Blot after Jean-Baptiste Regnault (French, 1754–1829). In Book II of Metamorphosis, Ovid tells the story of how Jupiter seduces huntress Diana's favourite nymph Callisto by taking on Diana's appearance in order to lure her.

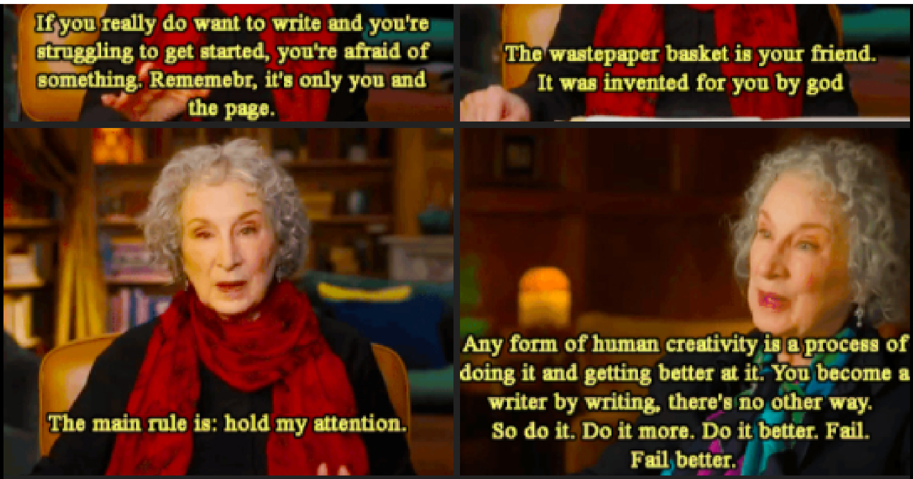
Red Riding Hood, let's start the story a different way: "It was dark inside the wolf."

As a writer, your goal is to keep your reader believing in your story, even though both of you know it's fiction



If you really do want to write and you're struggling to get started, you're afraid of something. Rememebr, it's only you and the page.

The wastepaper basket is your friend. It was invented for you by god

The main rule is: hold my attention.

Any form of human creativity is a process of doing it and getting better at it. You become a writer by writing, there's no other way. So do it. Do it more. Do it better. Fail. Fail better.

Some gold advice from Margaret Atwood from her Master Class on creative writing trailer.

If summit was to make twilight now set in the modern setting they would probably incorporate stuff to appeal to the teenyboppers notquitetwilight answered:

Twilight: - Edward being like "you changed my life" and Bella replying "I'm literally a high-schooler"

- Emmett to Bella probably: "You haven't known the triumphs and defeats, the epic highs and lows of vampire baseball"

- Edward gets a notification for a TikTok DM and when he opens it it's a video of James flinging Bella about the ballet studio with the Hannah Montana mmMmmWoahhhYeahhhhh noise playing over it

New Moon: - Jessica rambling to Bella about how weird it is that the Cullen kids disappeared from every single social media site after moving — "Like, who deletes Instagram??? I mean Facebook, yeah, I get it, but Instagram?????"

- When Bella yells at Jacob and tells him Edward misinterpreted the phone call about the funeral and is gonna try get himself killed as a result, Jacob answers her Wendy Williams-style — "Aw, aw, awright"

Eclipse: - That scene where Jacob and Bella go to see the pack but instead of the "I wish Bella would call/I wish Bella wouldn't call/Maybe I should call Bella/Maybe I should call Bella and hang up" it's more like "I wish Bella would text/I wish Bella wouldn't text/Maybe I should text Bella/Maybe I should slide into Bella's DMs then leave her on read"

- At the graduation party Doja Cat's Say So is blaring and the human teens in the background are doing the dance moves to it

Breaking Dawn Part One: - The scene where the Uley pack discuss the pregnancy in wolf form goes down like "there's only one thing worse than a vampire"/"A child"/"No"

- In any scene that she features in during Bella's > pregnancy, Alice is wearing a T-shirt with the Michael Jordan 'fuck them kids' meme on it

> Breaking Dawn Part Two: - Emmett explains their situation to prospective witnesses by saying "Edward parked his Big Mack Truck in Bella's little garage. But she was still human, got knocked up, and now we need your help"
> - Resume says "okay boomer" to Aro

The stunning failure of the Capitol police

> Yet the Capitol Police, a special law enforcement agency with jurisdiction over the Capitol grounds, was either utterly unprepared for what was coming, or allowed it to happen, or both. At a moment when force was needed to protect the legislature of the United States from right-wing terrorism, the police were missing in action. Only hours later, after more cops were brought in from Virginia and Maryland, and the D.C. National Guard had been activated, were the insurrectionists rooted out of the building.
> We have all seen dozens of times over the last several years the extreme violence that law enforcement departments across the country unleash with little or no provocation against leftist groups like antifa, Black Lives Matter protesters, Native Americans, or just random people who make them mad. Capitol Police shot an unarmed woman to death for running into a traffic barrier a few years ago. Federal law enforcement gassed and clubbed a park full of peaceful protesters so Trump could have a photo op outside a church. There can be no doubt whatsoever that if, say, the Black Panthers tried something like this, dozens of people would now be dead, and hundreds injured.

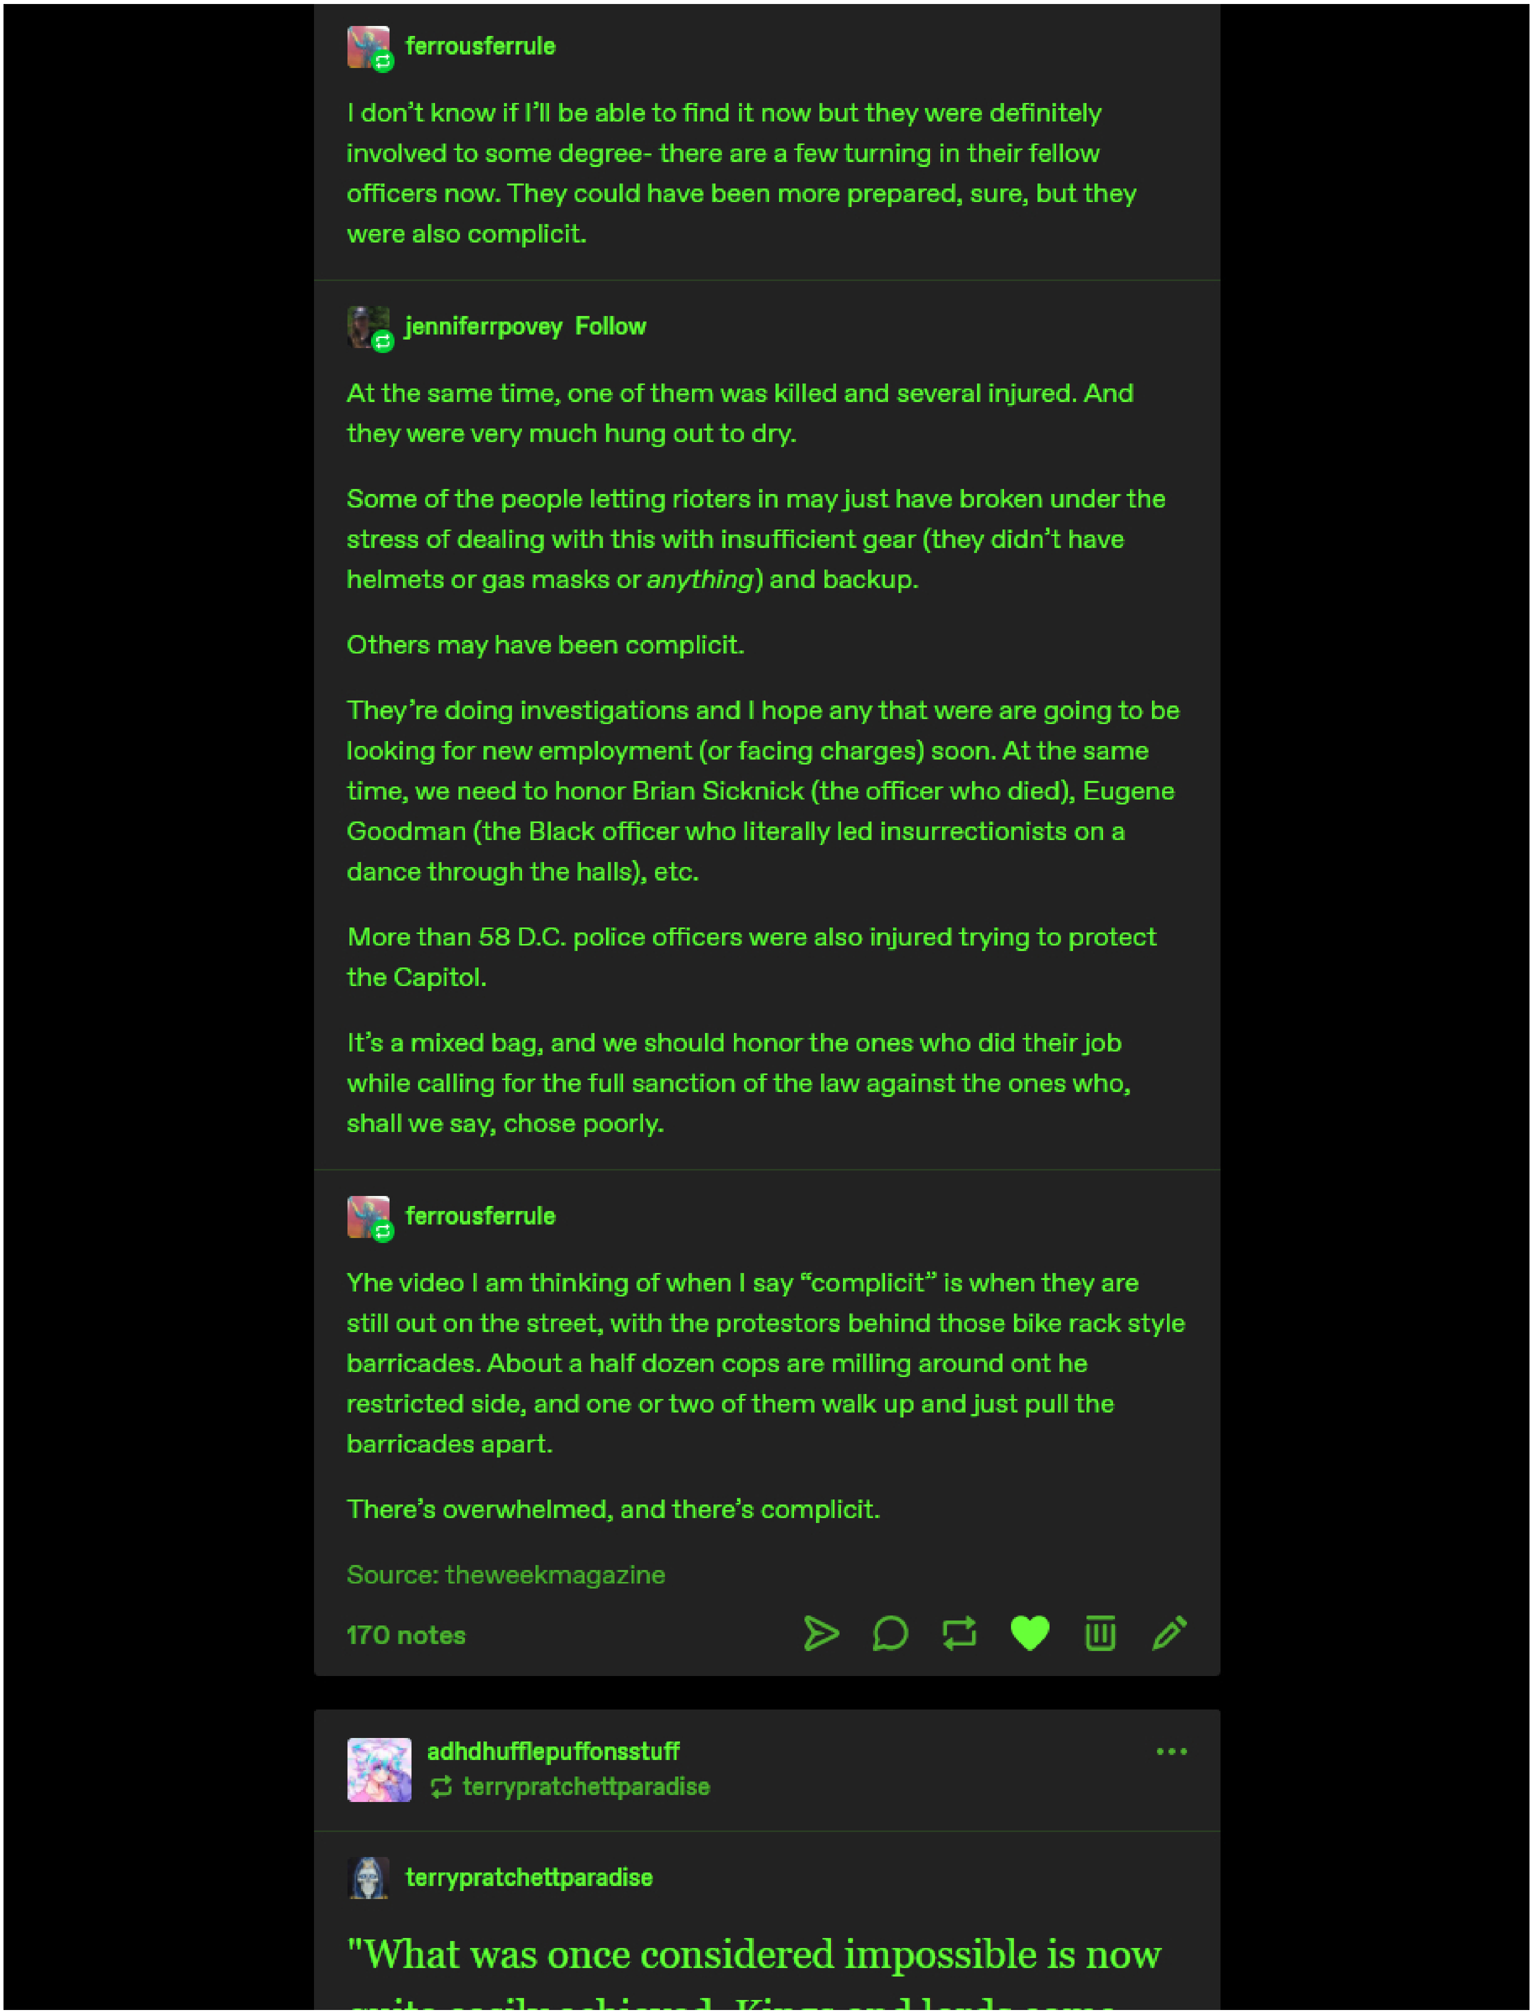
As somebody who has lived in the DC area for 20 years?

They were unprepared. Expecting security officers who's primary job is to make sure tourists stay where they're supposed to to hold off an armed assault was unreasonable.

(Look, it's possible some of them were in league too, but they had tear gas used on them and they didn't have the right protective gear).



ferrousferrule

I don't know if I'll be able to find it now but they were definitely involved to some degree- there are a few turning in their fellow officers now. They could have been more prepared, sure, but they were also complicit.

jenniferrpovey Follow

At the same time, one of them was killed and several injured. And they were very much hung out to dry.

Some of the people letting rioters in may just have broken under the stress of dealing with this with insufficient gear (they didn't have helmets or gas masks or anything) and backup.

Others may have been complicit.

They're doing investigations and I hope any that were are going to be looking for new employment (or facing charges) soon. At the same time, we need to honor Brian Sicknick (the officer who died), Eugene Goodman (the Black officer who literally led insurrectionists on a dance through the halls), etc.

More than 58 D.C. police officers were also injured trying to protect the Capitol.

It's a mixed bag, and we should honor the ones who did their job while calling for the full sanction of the law against the ones who, shall we say, chose poorly.

ferrousferrule

Yhe video I am thinking of when I say "complicit" is when they are still out on the street, with the protestors behind those bike rack style barricades. About a half dozen cops are milling around ont he restricted side, and one or two of them walk up and just pull the barricades apart.

There's overwhelmed, and there's complicit.

tropes i will never get tired of

- fake dating
- omniscient narrator who immediately contradicts the characters ("This is fine," she said. It was, in no way, shape, or form, fine.)
- deadpan jokes while swordfighting
- the "I FUCKING LOVE MY WIFE" guy
- oblivious pining that slowly escalates until A is going on page rants about how pretty B's eyes are but still doesn't seem to recognize they're in love
- Strong Leader Type having to physically fall down in order for the other characters to see how exhausted they are
- funny villains who talk and make jokes with their heroes while they're fighting them
- the villains presented as the protagonists
- increasingly pulls out bigger and bigger weapons from more unlikely places
- "I said all of your weapons" pulls out more
- "ALL OF THEM" pulls out one last tiny dagger
- traumatized character using humor to cover up ptsd
- characters going out for a break at a restaurant/movie/whatever and something bad happening
- using the "gasp what's that over there???" trick to avert the enemy's attention and it working
- a villain's weakness being something totally random and nonsensical
- a hero duo arguing over who's the sidekick while fighting a villain
- "don't be silly, we don't need [important thing]" "you lost it, didn't you?" "yeah"
- "what's the one thing I told you not to do tonight?" "raise the dead" "and what did you do?" "raised the dead"
- "I think that went pretty well" explosion in the distance

Apparently a lot of people get dialogue punctuation wrong despite having an otherwise solid grasp of grammar, possibly because they're used to writing essays rather than prose. I don't wanna be the asshole who complains about writing errors and then doesn't offer to help, so here are the basics summarized as simply as I could manage on my phone ("dialogue tag" just refers to phrases like "he said," "she whispered," "they asked"):

- "For most dialogue, use a comma after the sentence and don't capitalize the next word after the quotation mark," she said.
- "But what if you're using a question mark rather than a period?" they asked.
- "When using a dialogue tag, you never capitalize the word after the quotation mark unless it's a proper noun!" she snapped.
- "When breaking up a single sentence with a dialogue tag," she said, "use commas."
- "This is a single sentence," she said. "Now, this is a second stand-alone sentence, so there's no comma after 'she said.'"
- "There's no dialogue tag after this sentence, so end it with a period rather than a comma." She frowned, suddenly concerned that the entire post was as unasked for as it was sanctimonious.

thewritinggrindstone Follow

And!

- "If you're breaking dialogue up with an action tag"—she waves her hands back and forth—"the dashes go outside the quotation marks."
